Consent

R v Ewanchuk (1999) case:
defining sexual consent in Canadian law

Intimate Images Protection Act

B.C.'s Intimate Images Protection Act (IIPA) provides new ways to stop the non-consensual distribution of intimate images, including new processes to get these images removed from the internet more quickly and a more effective way for victims to seek monetary compensation. This legislation provides detailed definitions, enhanced privacy and consent considerations, as well as creating a new, simplified process for applications and claims.

NCDII is an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada, but existing criminal and civil legal options can be confusing, expensive, and victims may feel uncomfortable taking public legal action or reporting an incident to police. For many people that have had their intimate images shared without their consent, the main goal is to get those images taken down as soon as possible. The IIPA provides a fast, confidential, easy-to-use, online process to create orders declaring the distribution of intimate images unlawful.

Sexual Assault

- What is sexual assault?

Sexual assault is forcing someone to participate in sexual activities without their permission (consent). It is a sexual assault to sexually touch any part of another person's body without their consent.

- What can someone do if they have been sexually assaulted?
- What happens if it is reported to the police?
- Can the charges be dropped?

THERE ARE 460,000 SEXUAL ASSAULTS in Canada every year
